

General Election 2017

The Election Results Guide

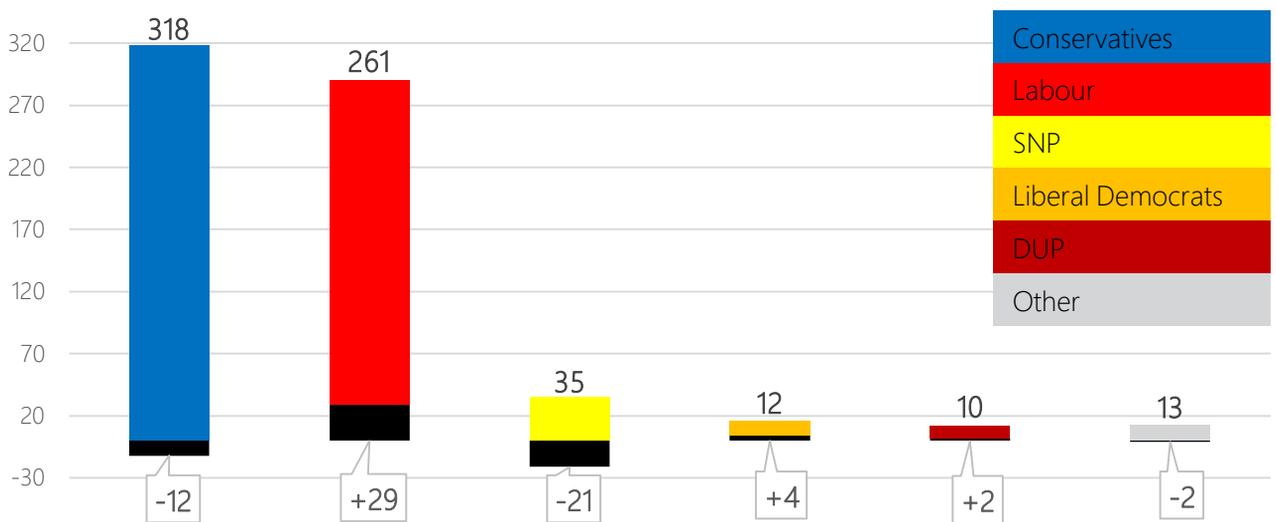

Contents

1. Overview
2. What It Means
3. Electoral Map
4. Meet the New MPs

Overview

The result of a hung parliament is a surprise to many and caused the pound to plummet last night when the exit poll was released. Theresa May called this election to strengthen her mandate, but she has simply not succeeded in doing so. Despite this, she has defied many critics and will not be resigning, at least in the short-term. The results show that we have returned to a two-party system with the vote share for Conservative being 42%, and for Labour 40%, followed by 7% for the Lib Dem, 2% for UKIP and 2% for the Greens 2%.

Theresa May will now press ahead with forming a government alongside the DUP. This would provide May with a majority of 5-6 seats which would be a viable, but not necessarily stable or easily manageable Government.

It was the largest turnout for a general election since 1997 - 68.6%, and a substantial rise in the number of young voters - 72% amongst 18-25 year olds. The younger voters have impacted, and increased, the Labour share of the vote.

Overview - continued

North of the border in Scotland, the Conservatives saw a rise in their vote with the SNP losing 21 seats – many citing the prospect of a second Independence Referendum as the reason. The result in Scotland is the best the Conservatives have seen since 1983. However, the Conservative surge in the North of England that was hoped for did not come to fruition – with Labour holding their ground.

Former UKIP voters who were predicted to turn to the Conservatives, however, they seem to have instead turned to Labour. UKIP had hoped to make a gain, having lost their only MP a few months ago, however this was not to be and resulted in Paul Nuttall, their leader, resigning.

What it means

Hung Parliament: With the Conservative party losing its majority, Theresa May is now reliant on the DUP – a right of centre Northern Irish party who now hold 10 seats in Westminster. Rather than seek a formal coalition as David Cameron did with the Liberal Democrats following the 2010 election (which saw Lib Dems take Cabinet positions), May is expected to seek an informal arrangement with the DUP where the party would support the Conservatives on a vote-by-vote basis known as ‘confidence and supply’.

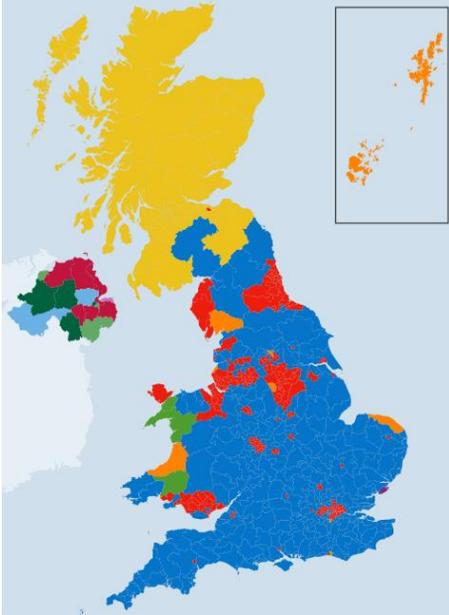

Whilst Labour has stated that it is ready to form a minority administration, the party would struggle to form a ‘progressive alliance’. Labour, the SNP, the Lib Dems, Green Party and Plaid Cymru combined only have 313 seats – fewer than the Conservative total of 318. However, despite not being able to form a government, Labour’s ability to disrupt the day-to-day workings of May’s administration is greatly enhanced.

Brexit: The election result has had the exact opposite effect of what Theresa May intended. Rather than strengthening her hand and reducing the potential disrupting effect of remain-backing Conservative MPs, May’s Government is even more vulnerable to opposition in the House of Commons. Formal Brexit negotiations were due to begin on 19th June. However, following the election result, senior European Union figures including chief negotiator Michael Barnier and President of the European Council Donald Tusk have indicated that although the start of negotiations could be delayed, they remain keen to proceed with the Brexit process. Additionally, as Tusk has highlighted, the end date of Brexit negotiations remains the same. The UK’s negotiating position is therefore weaker than ever with May’s task of attempting to satisfy the hard and soft Brexiteers in her party more difficult than ever.

A further General Election?: Having called an election on Brexit with a plea to the nation of strengthening her hand in the negotiations through an increased majority, May now sees herself in an incredibly fragile position. Reliant on informal support from a North Irish party, if this fragile arrangement encounters any stumbling blocks, a further General Election is surely inevitable.

Electoral Map

2015 Electoral Map

The 2015 election saw vast swathes of England vote Conservative as the party won 331 seats and enough to secure a small majority, despite pollsters predicting the outcome would be too close to call. Labour lost 26 seats overall, the SNP won all but three Scottish constituencies and the Liberal Democrats were largely wiped out – reducing their MPs from 49 to just 8.

Photo credit: BBC

The 2017 election saw the Conservatives remain the largest party but without a Commons majority, resulting in a hung parliament.

- The Conservatives lost 12 seats (with one yet to declare) and Labour has gained 29 seats.
- Labour's national share of the vote rose by 10% with a strong showing in northern England, London, East Anglia and the south coast.
- The SNP lost 21 seats with the Conservatives benefitting most. However the SNP is still the largest party in Scotland.
- The Liberal Democrats saw a net gain of four seats.
- In Northern Ireland, there was wholesale change, with all 3 SDLP seats going either to Sinn Fein or the DUP.

2017 Electoral Map

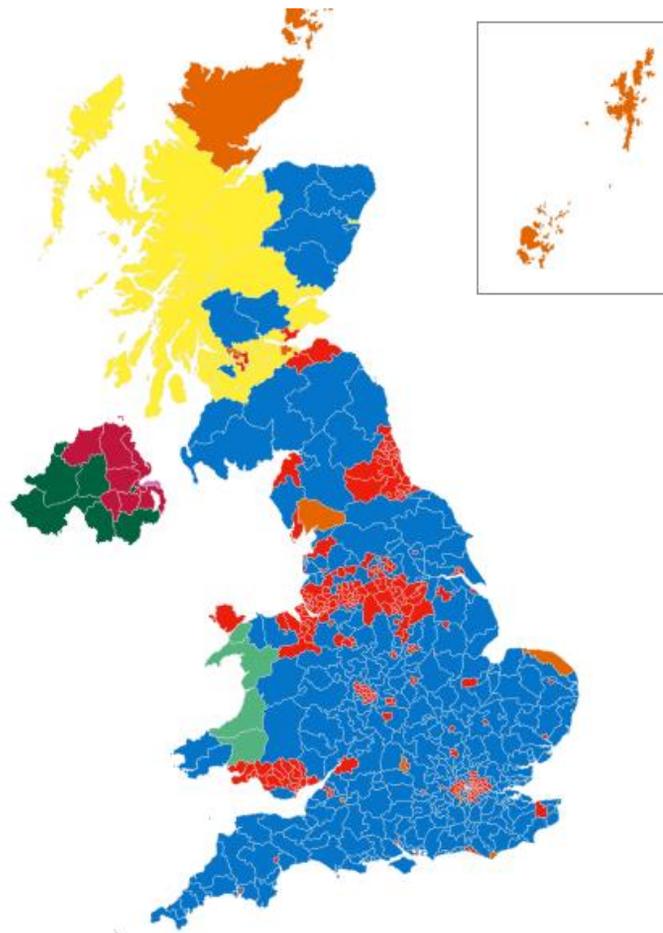

Photo credit: BBC

Big Beasts Lose their Seats

Changed seats

The map on the left displays the 39 seats that changed hands:

- 20 Labour gains in England including Sheffield Hallam - of former Liberal Democrat leader Nick Clegg.
- The Conservatives took 12 SNP seats.
- In Northern Ireland, the SDLP and UUP lost all of their MPs.

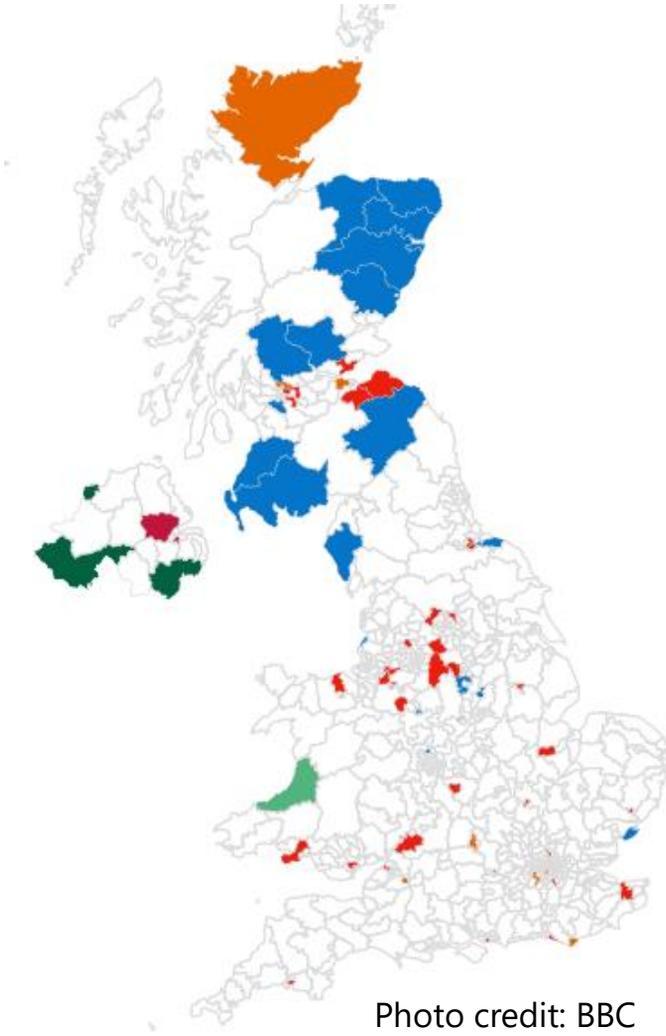

Photo credit: BBC

High-profile scalps

As with any election, there were a number of high-profile scalps:

- Former First Minister Alex Salmond (Gordon);
- SNP's Westminster leader, Angus Robertson (Moray);
- Former Deputy PM Nick Clegg (Sheffield Hallam);
- Several Ministers: Ben Gummer (Tory manifesto author), Gavin Barwell, Rob Wilson, Nicola Blackwood, David Mowat, Jane Ellison, Simon Kirby and James Wharton.

Alex Salmond

Nick Clegg

Jane Ellison

Ben Gummer

Nicola Blackwood

Meet the New MPs

A new team, and new opportunities

Every new Parliament brings new opportunities. We've looked into the new MPs with backgrounds in health. Find our mini-profiles below.

Karen Lee, Labour, Lincoln

Lee has lived in Lincoln all her life, and has previously described herself as a “lifelong socialist”. She has chaired the City Council’s Community leadership Scrutiny Committee, and has served as Lincoln’s Mayor. She has trained and worked as a nurse.

Laura Pidcock, Labour, North West Durham

Prior to the election, Laura Pidcock held a number of education roles in the charity sector; prior to that she worked as a mental health support worker.

Preet Gill, Labour,
Birmingham Edgbaston

As a councillor Preet was appointed Cabinet Member for Public Health and Protection, and has a long history working in the public sector. She is the first Sikh woman MP.

Liz Twist, Labour, Blaydon

Liz worked as regional head of health during her time at UNISON; she represented local NHS workers, and was involved in workforce issues. She has been vocal in calling for increased staff numbers in the NHS

Mike Hill, Labour, Hartlepool

Mike covered Richmond's Mental Health services as part of his role at UNISON. He is a veteran health campaigner, calling for the integration of Health and Social Care, protection of NHS services. He campaigned for the future of Hartlepool's assisted fertility unit and GP practices.

10

What happens next?

Over the next week we expect to see greater clarification regarding the relationship of the Conservatives and the Democratic Unionist Party. We can expect to see the formation of a Cabinet and the appointment of Ministers thereafter. This is on the proviso that Theresa May remains party leader and Prime Minister.

Timetable (subject to change):

- 13th June - Parliament returns; MPs will begin to be sworn in.
- 19th - Queen Speech and State Opening of Parliament.
- 19th - Target date for the start of Brexit negotiations.
- 22nd – 23rd - EU Council Leaders' summit: EC's chief Brexit negotiator Michel Barnier reportedly hopes to be able to brief leaders on his first round of negotiations with the UK at this meeting.